Kennedy Assassination: An 'Industry's' Promise

12/16/77

To the Editor:

Current front-page stories make it apparent that the Kennedy Assassination Industry is living up to expectations. It is said that the Lincoln Assassination Industry remained viable for 50 years. With the advance in today's communications and publicity techniques over those of a century ago, the K.A.I. should exceed this span.

The K.A.I., like the pornography industry, will be virtually unaffected by our dwindling supplies of cheap energy. This advantage, plus its predictable longevity, should make it one of the most promising fields for the young to enter.

John Caldwell

While huge sums of money will be made, the real opportunities lie, however, with the politicians. It is not unrealistic to envision that some time in the next several decades some political hack will make it all the way to the White House on the Kennedy assassination issue. All that is needed is another round of fear such as we had in the McCarthy era.
